No invitations have been issued, and the guests will be limited to relatives and a few intimate friends of the bride and groom. Mr. John Russell Leary gave a lovely buffet luncheon at her home, 1112 West Avenue, yesterday. The whole lower floor of the house was arranged with slender vases of lavender and yellow flowers and a big basket of lavender and lavender sweet peas decorated the luncheon table. Mrs. Leary received with her two sisters, Mrs. J. Jordan Leary and Miss Mary Leary, and about fifty guests were entertained.

Opening of the Marshall House.
A most auspicious and notable celebration took place yesterday afternoon when the Association of the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities threw open the old home of Chief Justice John Marshall at Ninth and Marshall Streets. The house was built by Chief Justice Marshall himself, and with its wide and simple rooms, its harmonious detail and its superior beauty of line and construction, is a unique in keeping with the mind and nature of the great man who planned it and lived within its walls. The association has been busy for a long time attending to the refurbishing of the old home, and the work has been hung in soft-toned papers suitable to the period when it was the dwelling place of Marshall and his wife, Polly Ambler; there are pieces of old china, rare old candlesticks, ancient prints and old mahogany placed about the rooms against the background of the white wainscoting and old brick fireplaces. Everywhere the spacious rooms were decorated in spring dowers and silver tankards that had been used to grace many splendid occasions that have gone down in history, were hung in bright blossoms and placed on the tall mantle shelves.

A notable and distinguished company of men and women were present and the sun came through the quaint old windows and lit the assembly and lighted up the sacred rooms of the home that the expounder of the Constitution had made for his family. Judge James Keith, president of the Court of Appeals of Virginia, presided. Judge Keith made a brief but golden speech. He said that these people were assembled to commemorate the completion of the pious task undertaken by the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities, and that the work would bear its own testimony as to how well that task had been carried out. He paid glowing tribute to Chief Justice Marshall, of all the great men whom Virginia has mothered, the name of Marshall stands second only to Washington, since he laid the foundation of this country's great and so deep that we to-day may enjoy the assured blessing of peace under law. Judge Marshall was preceded to the Supreme bench of the United States by four great and brilliant men; they had left the Constitution a dead letter; he left it a living, practical instrument.

Judge Keith said that to the intelligent owners of the house committee of the A. P. V. A. and its able and efficient chairman, Mrs. Walter Christian, to the city of Richmond and its Council, who, by its vote, conveyed the deed of the property to the association, and to the descendants of the family of Judge Marshall, who had so generously contributed and loaned so many interesting relics and furniture, was due the gratitude of the people of the city and State, for it is by the combined efforts of all that this work has been brought to so happy a conclusion.

He extended the thanks of the association to them and praised in his own, as well as the behalf of the A. P. V. A., the accomplishment of this undertaking. Judge Keith closed his speech by introducing Mrs. William G. Starnard, the historian of the association.

Mrs. Starnard read an extremely able and interesting paper on John Marshall. It was generously spiced with anecdotes of the life of the great man, and made him seem, just as Mrs. Starnard said that she wanted him to seem, a real flesh and blood human being and not the bronze figure of a demigod, as up high out of our lives and entirely out of touch. She sketched the early part of his life with delightful humor, reared as Judge Marshall was in frugality on a frontier farm, the oldest of fifteen other little Marshalls in a home where his father really came in contact with the books that he must have read and touched the blue brocade gown that his mother wore for best occasions. He had Monroe for his schoolmate in the little school in Westmoreland, where his father, John Marshall, had learned the little Latin and less Greek, and he had the companionship always of clever parents.

She sketched the boy as a soldier, setting forth from "Oak Hill" in Fauquier County, over duty and over hill, and it was when John Marshall was a soldiering across the green fields of his native county that one comes upon the greatest rival of Blackstone in the life of the able jurist. There were pictures of the scenes of his maiden speech made from a stump, a man, ever simple in his tastes, without ostentation, yet always dominating his fellow men and swaying them with his power, John Marshall, the hero of Williamsburg, John Marshall, the lawyer, where at the bar his powers of mind and character met instant recognition, and John Marshall, the accountant, gravely writing the price of his wife's bonnet down in a note book. He practically made these United States during the third part of a century that he was upon the Supreme bench.

It was a very intimate and delightful paper about such a distinguished personage, who seemed at once to come to be your friend across the wide years that have passed since he lived in the house that is so characteristic of its creator, with its wellbred suavity, its chaste entrance and sturdy and simple lines. He had for his friends the men, who, with their families, composed the society that made Richmond famous; his club life, his home life, his life as a great statesman, all were touched by Mrs. Starnard and made into a whole that was altogether fascinating and charming to her audience.

The Right Rev. Robert A. Gibson, D. D., pronounced the benediction, and a reception followed these exercises.

Wedding.
A pretty wedding took place Tuesday afternoon in Roanoke, at 5 o'clock in Christ Episcopal Church, when Miss Mary Annette Burns, daughter of Stephen Burns, of Roanoke, was married to John Pettijohn Waller, of Norfolk, the Rev. Archer Bogher performing the ceremony.

The church was decorated with palms and Easter lilies, and preceding the ceremony, Miss Deal gave a musical program on the organ during the assembling of the guests. To the strains of the "Lobelia" and "Wedding March," the bride party approached the altar, where they were met by the groom, with his best man, William Macon Waller, of Lynchburg. The ushers were Jesse M. Waller, of Richmond; Dr. Frank V. Clark, William C. Tillman, Alexander Claiborne, all of Roanoke. Mrs. Luke Garrett, as matron of honor, wore a lovely gown of embroidered chiffon over pink satin, with a black picture hat, and carried an arm bouquet of La France roses.

The bride entered with her father. Her costume was a snub traveling suit of old blue ratine, and the details of her attire harmonized. Her bouquet was of roses.

The bride and groom left immediately for Washington, Philadelphia, Atlantic City and New York, and will be at home after April 5 at the Lorraine Hotel, Norfolk.

Monday evening, after the wedding rehearsal, Mrs. Luke Garrett entertained the party and out-of-town guests at an informal reception in her home, 138 Seventh Avenue, Southwest. Decorations throughout the house were in green and white, and in the dining-room a buffet supper was served.

Out-of-town guests here for the wedding included Mrs. William Bacon Waller, Sr., of Lynchburg; Mrs. William Waller, Jr., of Lynchburg; Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Waller, of Richmond; Miss Louise Waller, of Lynchburg; Mrs. S. M. McCubbin, of Salisbury, N. C.; Mrs. W. B. Maupin, of Salisbury, N. C.

CASTELLANE AFTER BARONESS VAUGHAN

Name of Miss Anne Morgan Unjustifiably Mixed in Affair.

BY LA MARQUE DE FONTENAY.

NOW that the most important and authoritative of all Belgian papers, namely, the independence Belge, which occupies in Belgium and all over the Continent of Europe a position somewhat similar to that of the London Times, in England, has given utterance in print to the report, I may mention that a persistent rumor has been current for some time past to the effect that Boni de Castellane is bent on marrying the former favorite and morganatic widow of Leopold II., namely, the lady who was known by the name of Baroness Vaughan. She, indeed, is the multi-millionaire whose hand he is said to have been seeking, and it is solely owing to the fact that the lady whom he is asserted to be anxious to marry is enormously rich, that the name of Miss Anne Morgan has been most unjustifiably mixed up in the affair, without the slightest shadow of any foundation.

That Boni de Castellane has been very active for some time past to the ex-Banquet Caroline Lacroix, who during her association with King Leopold used to go by the name of Baroness Vaughan, is an undeniable fact. It is also perfectly true that in spite of her foolish marriage, the lady, in whom she is now divorcing, she has retained the bulk of the immense sums of money which King Leopold invested in her name, or else confided to trustees for her benefit. In fact, she is a very rich woman indeed, since Leopold lavished everything that he could upon her and upon the two sons whom she bore him, with the object of disinherit her three legitimate daughters. The few millions of francs for which the three princesses are suing his estate represent only a very small portion of the great wealth which he accumulated.

In this connection it must be borne in mind that Leopold married the ex-Banquet Caroline Lacroix, Baroness Vaughan, on his deathbed. It was an ecclesiastical union, for the existence of which the Cardinal Archbishop of Malines, Primate of Belgium, is the authority. It is true that the eyes of the law, and did not have the effect of legitimizing his two sons. At the time of their birth in France they had been duly registered there as the offspring of Caroline Lacroix, without any mention being made as to the

It would break and crack open in great places and bleed freely. It burned and itched and I would almost scratch the flesh off. When the itching ceased the burning was dreadful. My face was swollen. identity of the father. He bestowed upon them the title of Duke of Terwuren and of Count of Havelstein. But these honors were not sanctioned by the Belgian government nor by any other foreign state, so that they remain purely honorary.

Durieux, the ex-commissioned officer of the French army, who had been Caroline Lacroix's friend and agent at the time of Leopold's death, and who had assisted her in securing possession of all the private papers and documents which the King had been wont to keep in his handsome flat in Paris, recognized the two boys as his offspring when he married their mother about six months after King Leopold's death. Consequently, these boys are officially his offspring, and in law are entitled to his name of Durieux. They still remain with their mother, and it is in order that they may retain possession of them that the emperor has been willing to consent to settle upon Durieux a sum amounting to nearly a million of dollars, but which is a mere drop in the bucket compared to the wealth at her disposal.

That the woman expects to marry Boni de Castellane as soon as she obtains her own divorce from Durieux is an undoubted fact. It seems, however, incredible that she should be willing to sacrifice the enormous sum of his self-respect and position for the sake of her money. He forfeited most of them through the circumstances of his marriage to Anna Gould, which led to his being "killed" by the French Jockey Club, with a greater number of blackbills than had ever been cast against any candidate since its foundation. He injured himself still more in the eyes of the people of his own class by his wholly excusable conduct towards Anna Gould, who was his wife. If he weds the ex-Baroness Vaughan for the sake of her money, the social boycott will become complete.

Over it, it is difficult to understand why he should be making such efforts to secure from the Vatican the ecclesiastical annulment of his marriage to Anna Gould. If it is only to marry the ex-Baroness Vaughan, or the latter will be a divorcee, so as the decree dissolving her union with Durieux is confirmed by the French courts.

Count Paul Festetics, Sr., who has just been appointed by Emperor Francis Joseph to the office of grand chamberlain of the court of Hungary, must not be confounded with his cousin, Count Paul Festetics, Jr., a younger brother of the late Count Festetics, who is the head of the house. If I lay stress on this fact, it is because the confusion between the two Counts Paul Festetics has already led to all kinds of disagreeable complications, and even sensational episodes.

The new grand chamberlain of the court of Hungary is a man of seventy-two, who is a member of the Hungarian House of Lords and of the Privy Council of the empire. He is married to Countess Francesca Palffy von Erdody, who is one of the ladies of the palace of the court of Vienna, and they have no children.

Count Paul Festetics, Jr., is a man of fifty-two, and no longer holds any kind of office, not even a commission on the reserve list of the army. He came prominently to the fore in the early eighties by his eloquence with the emperor, and then married the lady. Naturally, the couple were ostracized, in spite of which they attempted to brave matters and took up their residence at Pesth.

On one occasion, invitations to a court ball intended for Count Paul Festetics, Sr., and for his wife, were delivered to Count Paul, Jr. The latter, although he must have known that there was an error, availed himself of the opportunity to appear at a court ball. It was a ball at which the late Empress was present.

The appearance upon the scene of Count Paul Festetics, Jr., and of the ex-Madam Fischer, created a great excitement among the guests and consternation among the court dignitaries, none of whom at first cared to interfere. Not wishing to provoke a scandal, the guests, however, held aloof from the scene, as if fearing that the touch of their skirts would contaminate their dresses.

One of the dignitaries, bolder than the rest, inquired of Count Paul Festetics the reason for his presence, and received a very sharp answer from him, to the effect that he, as well as his wife had duly received cards of invitation. This was reported to the grand master of the court, and by him to the Emperor and Empress, just at the moment when they were about to make their entry into the ballroom, at the head of the procession.

Francis Joseph, on learning of the presence of Count Paul Festetics, Jr., and of his wife, was so incensed, and gave a peremptory order that the couple should be removed at once, by force if necessary, before the Empress and himself made their appearance. Nor did the imperial courtiers make it easy with their answers of state and ceremony until the couple and countless had vanished. One of the principal chamberlains had offered his arm to the countess, informing her that he had the commands of the sovereign to escort her out of the palace, while another chamberlain took the arm of the count, and delivered to him a similar message.

On the following day Count Paul Festetics, Jr., sent challenges to both chamberlains as well as to the grand master of the court. But by command of Emperor Francis Joseph, these dignitaries declined the challenges, on the ground that they had merely executed his very peremptory orders.

Count Paul's union with the lady, one, and in course of time he divorced the ex-Madam Fischer, and married a widow Countess Dessewicz, by whom he has a seven-year-old son. But inasmuch as it is a divorcee, and, in the present view, despite her excellent birth, is not admitted to court.
